THE MUSIC MAN (1962): Classic of flag-waving, feel-good, musical-comedic Americana, based on a hit Broadway show, with a refreshingly jaundiced subtext: Footloose con man sets out to fleece a repressed Midwestern community during the early days of the 20th century, but, instead, he learns a lesson in moral responsibility from the town's comely librarian.

FINAL ACCOUNT (2020): A powerful documentary, with candid interviews from the last living generation of Germans who were is one form or another participants in the Third Reich. This is an important piece of history that is documented so future generations can learn from history, rather than repeat it.

THE WOMAN IN THE WINDOW (2021): Living in denial, the depressed, pill-popping child psychologist, Anna Fox, has holed herself up in her eerily vacant, ill-lit Manhattan brownstone apartment for the past ten long months, separated from her husband and their eight-year-old daughter. While unsuccessfully grappling with agoraphobia and intense panic attacks, suddenly, the Russells move in across the street, and brimming with curiosity, Anna decides to distract attention away from her problems by peeking into the lives of the unsuspecting new tenants. Then, one night, tensions flare, a deadly kitchen knife gleams in the dim light, and before long, someone ends up dead. Has troubled Anna, indeed, witnessed a gruesome scene of blood-stained domestic violence or is her wine-addled mind playing cruel tricks on her?

LIVE TO 100: (2023): Most people hope they'll live a long, healthy, and happy life, but few are able to travel the world in an attempt to reverse-engineer the formula for longevity. That's exactly what Dan Buettner did: Beginning in the early aughts, Buettner collaborated with National Geographic, scouring the globe in pursuit of places where people live much longer than average, and thus, the concept of "Blue Zones" came to be.

The Blue Devils Come Home (2011): "The Blue Devils Come Home," a documentary film by Jeffrey Wisotsky, chronicles the remarkable heroism of the soldiers of the 88th Infantry Division fighting to defeat Hitler's armies during World War II. Kids from New York City, including the filmmaker's father, they became one of the great fighting units in military history. The Broadway Soldiers! Who knew what to expect when they were drafted in 1942 to fight a war thousands of miles from home? Through 344 consecutive days of combat in the mountains and valleys of Italy, they became the "Blue Devils." Intercut with rare period motion picture and still photography, "The Blue Devils Come Home" introduces some American heroes for this and all time.

Followed by a Q&A with the Director (& FL Resident) Jeffrey Wisotsky!
